COMMENCEMENT AT YALE COLLEGE

NEW-HAVEN MAGAZINES-THE SOPHOMORE BIENNIAL JUBILEB.

NEW-HAVEN, July 21, 1860.

For a University town New-Haven is quite active in literature. True, men here seldon publish a book; and the classics are not often murdered except by under graduates. Perhaps we should more correctly call New-Haven men thinkers—and the literature which comes of this tendency, is significant enough in its way -but the more a man thinks, the less he cares to flood the world with his speculations. Men connected with the University here, are widely known as thinkers, and not as mere fine writers. In this respect they are quite in contrast with a certain set of Boston writers, who mistake elegance for thought, and in the name of liberality, dogmatize on every subject under heaven. The former often publish their results, but in a quiet, modest way, and, as if they had a certain taint of Perianism, are condemned by many for what in reality they are quite innocent of. New-Haven is a Poritan city, and there is enough bigotry here to frighten any one who has much hope for the next generation; but the bigotry is confined chiefly to the uneducated dasses; the truly educated class are eminently lib ral, holding to that sort of liberality which has fixed opinions, yet is charitable to all, and sees a vein of truth even in the is charitable to all, and sees a vein of truth even in the dogmatic Liberal's assumptions. Our statement is backed up by facts. No une can read The Charch Review, The New-Englander, or The University Quarterly, without seeing these things for himself. The Puritan has lost his rigor, the Liberal his dogmatic than the result is a temper of mind rare and useful. Each of these magazines has genuine vigor. The Church Review stands up for Episcopacy; The New-Englander pleads the cause of Dr. Taylor and the New-England Theology; The University Quarterly takes up topics interesting to students, and treas them wind the standard pleads the first of the two more stately Quarterlies. Sulliman's Journal of Science has a positivar

England The logy; The University Quarterly takes up topics interesting to students, and treas them rua ability not much inferior to the two more stately Quarterless. Stillman's Journal of Science has a position; and such as the support of its own, and as, in the present number, often has papers of great value. The Journal of the Assertan Geographical and Statistical Society is also edited bere, though published in New-York. Its new editor, D. C. Gilman, esq., the Librarian of Yale, is a man emineably fitted, both by his studies and experience, for his position; and in his hands the July sunder shows a marked improvement over previous issues. The Yale Literary Magazine is entirely local. It is the oldest student's jurnal in the country; its paper are often racy, and its "locais" are read with eagerness. It is just entering on its twenty-sixth volume.

But our three Quarteries demand a more minute octice. The New-Englander opens with a paper on the late Augustos Hillmons, brither of the poet, and a sund of singular characteristics. It is written by that Beangres of the pen, the Rev. Dr. Bascon. "A Letter fivna a Country Ciergyman" holds up the bright side of the number, and contains many sharp hits, well put. An avide on "The New Plantes" sums up omuch scenario information in a redaable way. "The Baptist in Connectent" is mainly historical, and furnishes a good commentary on the perpetual now hither of mere sees, whese figures are quite as degrading as those of the P. K., and whose "warring words," as Mr. Parker—whe critainly had experience enough—himself said, west only understand the new forms and provided the interest of the new arts, and looks as if it were written by an able hand Then comes a paper which will at ract much attention on "The Congregational Polity, and a Biblical Theology." Dissent as we may, from many of its poet liens, the body of the article, its main ideas, *specially when the penning and submer of a paper on "The Plenoacem of Moders Privalism," in the May number, which attracted much notic merit. "About Dr. Oldbam of Grevstones," is onebi the nost spicy mag-zine arti les we have ever seen. If Charles Lamb were alive it would be attributed to him. and as no one writes more like him than Lowell, author

Charles Lamb were alive it would be attributed to his, and as no one writes nore like him than Lowell, athor of "The New Priest" perhaps we do not err in stributing it to him. Whoever the writer is his singular vien of wisdom, edding and humor, will be that making of any magazine for which he writes. Two historical articles, "The English Reformation; the Nage-Head Story," and "Rountsh Perverts; where do they come from?" are singularly rich in the glin sees they give of the questionable things in religious history. Articles of this chaes appear frequently in his Review, and are one of its specialistics. The Rev. Dr. Coxe contributes "Two Letters to the Bishop of Arras," valuable as his orical materials. The Review is quite as horal as The New-Englander, though it appears in a somewhat different vein.

We come to The University Quarterty, which has quickly taken a very high position. All don its of its failure are at an end. In due time, instant of a sindent bard at Yale, it will have some general Secretary appointed as Editor, and then its articles, which now send often more labor lima than they can possibly get, will show more compactness and have better punctuasion; but with the best will to find fault with this [July] number, we have been unable to light upon anything worth mentioning. Its articles are sound, vigerous, carefully written, and often show fine scholarship. Some are racy as a chapter of "Tom Brown at Oxford;" others show up the defects of Yale (few though) and other colleges; others, as the Western College essays, dip into the prefond of others settle as one in the present number on Mrs. Stowe and her cricies, are able criticiams, Occasionally there is a vappedup college essay, in these are happily very scarce in this issue. ies, are able criticiams. Occasionally there as a waspedius, colleges essay, but these are happily very scarce in this issue. The news articles from various colleges are always interesting and will one day be valuable as history. This Quarterly is having a great influence apon American colleges. The tone of thought and purity of style must be greatly elevated by the wide circulation of a periodical whose essays are from students and whose pages are open to any one who can write a good enough pager for its pages. Its first general association of ecitors meets at Worcester, Mass., July 24, at the time of the College Regatus.

The Soph-mores got out of Biennial yesteriay, and spent the afternoon at Savin's Rock, West Haven. They lost not even one man by the examination. On their way to the Rock they screenaded the ladies at the West Haven Seminary. On resching the Rock they joked swam, rambled flirted, till diner time, whon, with sharp relieb, they sat down to an excellent dinner, and while last-ning to music from a city band, rapidly clarred the table. After dinner, speeches were in order, and Mr. Cook, who has the bonor of or ginuing The University Quarterly, replied in an excellent velo will never cease to trouble them till they cease to be Undergraduates.

The University Quarterly, replied in an excellent vela to the following trust:

The University Editors—The world, the flesh, and the derd, will never cease to trouble them till they cease to be University.

Meyrrs. Adams and McVergh, also made excellent spee hes. Dinner ended, pipes were filled and amid smoking, and laughter, and jokes, and the drinking of lemonade (for none drank aught stronger), and the singing of songs prepared for the oscasion, the afternoon ran on and at the setting of the sun, the whole company came back to Yale, every man of them able o go streight. Then they serena sed the to ors under whom they had been placed the past two years, and after they had got speeches from them, in the best good humer they broke up for the night. These is vibes are haracteristic of Yale, and are the best of proof that he social relations between teachers and the taughter kind and gentlemanly. This class is already somewhat noted as one of great promise, and even earpsaces the present graduating class in the number of its ending men. The following song, written for the ubilee by Mr. Blake, a member of the class, is worthy of insertion in Tax Tarausk for its good local hits:

Bewildered to distriction.

The last words only, in the book

Were "Proofs of satisfaction."
